

Bunnies, Link Sunday

I love rabbits. So much, the only comment my friend's husband had after walking through our house was, "What's with the bunnies?"

I just think they are inexpressively cute. That is really my only explanation. My only defense is there are other people out there who love them too. Happy Link Sunday.

 Fifi is a bunny's website. All the bunnies dress like runway models, and I am sure are highly compensated for what they do.

One of the most famous of all Rabbits, The White Rabbit, of Alice in Wonderland, can have his entire story, along with Alice of course, downloaded free on iTunes (free I say.) It is fun to hear the story this way. Search "Storynory" on iTunes. My daughter love it.

I bought Em this necklace from Little Put Books on Etsy.

Okay, fine! I got one for myself too.

I just had to like Dana and her site Aqua Rabbit. With a "Why" like that, how can we not be friends?

(do-it-yourself field guides, $225. I want...)

Placed under the heading, "There is a website for figgin' everything," Cute Overload.

I did this post on some bunnies around Orange County, here.

Rabbits hop around everywhere in literature and movies. The brave bunnies of Watership Down are some of my favorites.

If you haven't read this book I will lend it to you, so great.

And of course, there is my bunny, Peter Rabbit.

I could just go on and on, but I can see by the way you are fidgeting in your seat and your eyelids are closing at a slower and slower pace, I am boring you (and making some of you lose whatever small opinion you had of me.) So I will stop.

I know, tomorrow when I see my friends, they will say, "Very interesting blog about the bunnies," sarcastically of course. Link Sunday can be brutal.