Orange County Daily Photo: Giant Wheel in the sky

The Irvine Spectrum's Giant Wheel is one of my favorite things to photograph. You can see my other photos of it Here and Here.

Something about this particular picture of it makes me happy.

For SkyWatch Friday. If you ever ask yourself, "I wonder what the sky looks like in Pensacola today?" You can go to SkyWatch Friday and see the sky from every corner of the planet. Believe it or not, there are over 350 people in the world who think this is a spectacular idea and enter their photos every week—mine's just one.

Daily Photo: Santa Ana row houses

These row houses are down in a part of Santa Ana I really like, though I don't know what it's called. Close to Flora Park, The Bowers, and Harvey's. I love the fall colors of the buildings. Seattle Daily Photo took this shot of an orange building and called it "Urban Autumn." When I saw it, swore then and there [and in the comments] that I would find "(Sub)Urban Autumn" in Orange County.

So here it is. These are the sorts of things that occupy my mind while I sit in line-up at my kids' school.

Today I am listening to: The Weepies' "I gotta have you."

Orange County Daily Photo: Little yellow car

My Escalade would eat this car for breakfast—like a lemon Pop Tart. They ARE adorable though, aren't they? I just want to put it in my pocket and take it to home with me.

My friend Blythe found this ultimately pointless feature on the safety of these "little cars" on YouTube. Then Blythe sums it up HERE. She's a clever one.

Today I am listening to: The Format's "Inches and Falling."

Orange County Daily Photo: Newport Beach in November
