

Little Suzie Dorton Turns 40

Okay, I said it, I am going to turn 40 in December. (Dorton is my maiden name)

Well, there is a whole list of things I want to do before 40 hits. One item is to go through all of my old photos and memorabilia. I started this endeavor today.

I encourage you too to take this delightful journey through old journals (with self-authored poems no less), photographs of big-haired people and cards from people you don't remember (who is Kim and why did she "owe her life" to me?)

Anyways, of course I will be dragging all of you through my past unashamedly. So if you knew me during this time and I have a photograph of you, be prepared to say, "What was I thinking?" as you come face to face with the "you" I knew in the eighties.

To set the stage, this is a picture of me (and my hair and nails) in 1986.

Below is my first little gold nugget. It is a flyer from a Christian Rock Concert at Knott's Berry Farm circa 1986. I was very into this "scene" when I was 17. Most of my friends I have today survived from this period of my life.

My best friend, The Goot, is married to the drummer of "Wild Blue Yonder." Here is a picture I took of Joey that very night.

Brian Doidge, Kevin Annis and Mike Knott

And here is the card that Brian sent me, along with some flowers (not pictured. I can't save EVERYTHING), thanking me for taking the pictures. He was my boyfriend at the time. It was clearly in the beginning of our relationship.

I haven't seen him in over 20 years, but I am quite certain he wouldn't want me to post that. (Now you can all make a mental note to never, ever, express a sentiment to me that can be reproduced.)

To close off this post, one of my favorite bands from High School, Simple Minds.....
