

McSweeney's Lists and John Moe

I have been following McSweeney's Lists for a while now. If you have a slightly tweaked sense of humor, fine-tuned by public radio, 70's sitcoms and your everyday existence, then you will love these lists. But, if you are just a normal person, with normal sensibilities, here is a link to CBS's Fall Lineup.

This list, by John Moe, wins my all-time favorite award.

Ways I've Let Down Popular Musicians.

BY JOHN MOE

-- --

Disappointed Chrissie Hynde by continuing to sob.

Permitted sun to go down on Elton John, thus failing him.

Failed to heed warning to stop in the name of love, broke Diana Ross's heart.

Was cruel to a heart that was true, much to the chagrin of Elvis Presley.

Stopped prior to getting enough, despite urging to the contrary by Michael Jackson.

Spoke even when told not to by Gwen Stefani.

Stopped believin', let go of the feelin', thereby enraging Steve Perry.

Clutched it too tightly, lost control, resulting in tersely worded letter from .38 Special.

Said "never"; Romeo Void merely shook their heads sadly.

Got together with only a few people, made no effort to love one another, received awkward phone call from the Youngbloods.

Failed to feel the noize, which doesn't seem like my fault, but Quiet Riot was still peeved.

Stayed perfectly sane, leaving Prince to go crazy by himself, which actually worked out best for everyone.

Went changing to try to please Billy Joel. Total fiasco.

The prize, John's blog Monkey Disaster , is now the ONLY man-written blog I include in my typelist (For non Typepadders: Blog Recommendations). Also, check out his book Conservatize Me, which might be concidered contraband in Orange County, not sure.
