Friday Five: Some Internet themed links…One Speech-Centered Pet Peeve

×

- 1) It is disturbing to me that MySpace has a "Browse" option.
- 2) At some stage you have to take a stand: is Internet capitalized or not? If you are interested in this kind of thing...
- 3) My friend John sent me this stat for my blog, he works doing something related to the internet (no caps for me) and has access to this kind of information:
- *highest ever rank was 3,383,853 (out of roughly 109 million 'distinct' websites)
- *.000015% of the global online users have been to your blog (I really haven't a clue what any of this means really. He says it's "decent.")
- 4) The webcomic (left) is by "XKCD: A webcomic of romance, sarcasm, math, and language." Check it out Here.
- 5) Watch Google Map Gone Terribly Wrong Video: Here.

The Speech-Centered Pet Peeve of the week is when someone (especially twenty-somethings) use the word "actually" right before they are going to give you bad news..."Actually, your table won't be ready for another 1/2 hour"...."Actually, we won't get any more MacBook Air's in until next month"...or just simply "Actually, no." You get the idea, total abuse of the word actually. Stop it.