

Today's Snapshot: Lunch with Lisa at The Filling Station

(Around the Orange Circle.)

Lunch with Lisa Mertins at The Filling Station in Orange yesterday produced this interactive "Snapshot."

If you go to Lisa's website—here—you will see me, taking the picture of Mr. C's...and a frightening picture of McDonald's toy dolls that she claims was inspired by my daughter's Dorothy, but I'm certain her girls are peerless.

As always, spending time with Lisa is inspiring (she's an accomplished creative mind), comforting (I'm not the only person in the world who collects "interesting" rocks), and downright fun (she's fun).

There was also Edward James Olmos. He sat at the table across from us at The Filling Station. Lisa didn't believe it was him, but I saw "American Me." I'd know his face anywhere.