

I choose my (Cyber) friends only far too well: Marcy Photos

I've "met" many people within this "cyberland" of my blog. These "cyber friends" (okay, I'll stop with the quotes, so annoying) I get to know pretty well. One such person is "Marcy Photos" or just Marcy if you like. She is a regular reader and prolific commentator at (Emphasis Mine), which I wholeheartedly appreciate.

Marcy is a commercial photographer in Orange County (Check out her fab site here,) but she also has an artistic flair. She sent me this photo after I posted "My David Lynch Moment."

Seriously creepy, and when I say creepy, I mean brilliant. She educated clueless-about-anything-artsy me on this type of photography—it's called digital composition photo art. She went on to tell me this photo has over 15 images layered within it and sometimes these pieces take over 80 hours to produce! (hmmm...spending hour upon hour on something you are passionate about when you could be watching TV or embracing your responsibilities...sounds familiar...)

More you say?...settle down...I love this one. Would be great on the new OC Moms site at The Register.

Ahhhh so cute...and so true.

I know! She should have an Etsy store, but sadly she doesn't (yet). I also think she should have her very own blog on her

"MarcyPhotos" site. She obviously has "the gift" of our special kind of gab.

"Perfect skin" by Lloyd Cole